

eBay iPhone app gets update

Friday, 14 August 2009

eBay is the top auction website online and has tons of products for shoppers and lots of buyers for sellers. It's a win-win situation often, though many of use loathe eBay policies. eBay has had an iPhone app available for a long time now and the app has been given an update.

The new release now sends users push notifications when they have been outbid on an item and when an auction is nearing completion. The user can press a button on these messages and open the item to up their bid or just let things end.

The app is also now integrated with PayPal to allow users to pay for items from within the mobile app. The app also now allows the searching of completed items and item descriptions. The company also says that another update will even allow users to add listings on eBay with the mobile app.

[via PCWorld]